

New Phase Of Michigan Week, County Tours

A new phase of Michigan Week is underway at 9 a.m. on Tuesday, May 19th when a caravan of cars will leave downtown Gaylord for a county tour of Crawford County.

The "get-acquainted with your own county" tour was an idea of Charles Anspach, president of Central Michigan University at Mount Pleasant who is also director chairman of northeastern Michigan. Tom Michelin, driving is co-chairman with Dr. Anspach and Woodward C. Smith, president of Central Michigan.

Accompanying the tour will be Tom Michelin, "Mr. Michigan Outdoors," as he is now well known, the Crawford County tour one of the features of a well known television program. The publicity gained by Crawford County from some of the proposed stops could be a great tourist builder.

The tour will be escorted by state Police cars and will be equipped with a sound car for use at each stop. The Crawford County tour was set up by the Michigan Week Regional Committee working with the Michigan Department of Conservation and cooperating with the local Michigan Week Committee, Crawford County Chamber of Commerce and the Grayling Business Association.

To insure that all goes well on the tour the Crawford County Superintendent Bruce Carlson will drive the tour route a day prior to be sure that all jags are in top shape.

Among the resource people who make the tour will speak at the various stops are Clarence Roberts and Russell Wright, Conservation officers; John Byerly, district Game Superintendent; Peterson, District Fish Superintendent; Grant Wykhus, assistant Regional Parks and Recreation Supervisor; Robert Kelly of the Geological Survey; Paul Bar-

May Festival Highly Successful

The teachers at the Grayling Public School want to thank the parents and people of the community for making our May Festival a real success. We will now have a new piece of playground equipment.

We were all so proud of our boys and girls, they all looked so pretty and were really sparkling with excitement.

The program really showed the large growth and developmental differences between Kindergarten and sixth grades all in one evening.

The Band gave us a good marching tune to help us in entering the gym and getting seated. There were around 450 of us you know.

Nancy Hoffmann's welcome gave us a thrill. She did an excellent and mature job of public speaking.

The Kindergarten looked much the same as you bow hunters when you start out in the fall. Their fair ladies really found their hunters around the campfire. They were very cute and uninhibited.

Mrs. Smythe did a good job training at one of the world's largest forest nurseries. The tour will wind up at the Conservation Training School for dinner and a summary talk by Mr. Barrett. The speaker will also cover the use of lands in the area for recreation and other purposes.

The next day a similar tour will be made in Otsego County and on the day following of Montmorency County. The tours will attempt to make county residents more familiar with their own county and it is hoped that the tours may set a pattern for the rest of the state to follow during Michigan Week in 1960.

More Older People Now Own Households In Crawford County

(Special to The Avalanche
New York, April 23.—A greater number than ever before of Crawford County's older people now have the means to live alone and are doing so.

Locally, in the period since 1950, a large part of the increase in the number of households, which amount to 23 per cent, has been in single units, occupied for the most part by these senior citizens.

This developing pattern is brought out in data gathered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the Department of Commerce and by other sources.

It has been made possible by provisions that were made over the years in the form of pension and retirement plans, in savings and in insurance protection. They have begun to pay off at an accelerated rate.

Benefiting chiefly from it are the elderly and the incapacitated, who would have had to rely on aid from relatives or from welfare agencies in former days. Instead, they are now becoming self-sustaining. Each year more and more of them are finding it possible to maintain their own households.

The current reports show that Crawford County, which had a total of 1,234 households in 1950, is now a community of 1,560 households.

This increase, 23 per cent, compares favorably with the United States gain, 18 per cent and with that of the East North Central States, 20 per cent.

An unprecedented number of the local households, an estimated 290, are listed as single unit establishments.

This rise in the number of people living alone is a national development. A survey by the Bureau of the Census reveals that more than 6 million of the 50 million households in the United States today are one-person units. They have more than doubled since 1940. Since 1950 alone the rise has been over 50 per cent.

An index of the decline in the payment of taxes made under the Old Age and Survivors Insurance program, one of the social security bulwarks, which now covers three times as many people as it did originally.

In Crawford County, according to the latest annual report, payments to local residents are at the rate of $21,000 a month and are rising rapidly.

1959 Boats Registered In Crawford County

Of the 217,553 Michigan watercraft registered by the Department of State last year, 350 of them were from Crawford County.

According to James M. Hare, Secretary of State, 4,631 boats licensed for use on Michigan's inland waterways were owned by out-of-state owners.

"Each year one sees increasing numbers of boat trailers on Michigan highways carrying watercraft owned by enthusiasts from states not blessed with thousands of lakes and hundreds of miles of river recreational areas," Hare said.

"With the coming of more leisure time and the establishment of additional launching sites and marinas throughout our water wonderland, we can be sure that our boat building and watercraft-serving recreation industries will continue to grow."

Watercraft registration forms can be obtained at all Department of State branch offices, at most sporting goods shops, sheriff's offices, marinas, and many hardware stores. The fee is $2.00.

An Insatiable Monster . . .

"An ever-increasing chunk of your tax dollar goes to atone that Frankenstein monster known as 'the farm robbery.' It devours 5.4 billion dollars in this year'sgulp. And the money solves nothing!"

Thus writes John Strohm, one of the country's leading agricultural writers and editors in the May issue of The Reader's Digest. And the title of his article indicates its premise: "Let's Stop Trying to Legislate Farm Income!"

Just about everyone agrees that the various federal farm programs so far tried have been failures. So new programs are being concocted for Congressional consideration. One of these, which seems to have considerable support, follows the principles of the Brannan Plan which was suggested some years ago. Under it, farm products would be sold in the free market for whatever prices they would bring, and the government could pay farmers the difference between that price and what the law established as a fair price.

This scheme, as Mr. Strohm sees it, has "a lot of political sex appeal." Theoretically, it would achieve a series of important goals all at once — that is food would be consumed instead of stored; food prices to consumers probably would decline, and the farmer would get his fair price.

So much for the credit side. The debits, as listed, are of a staggering character. If farm prices were supported at 90% of parity, the direct-payment plan would cost $10.7 billion a year within five years. This would happen at a time when farm income is at its historical high and our farm efficiency and output "are the envy of the Communist world." Moreover, Mr. Strohm makes this big point: "... farmers have accomplished this in spite of, not because of, government aid. To illustrate: livestock men, who have successfully fought off government price supports, are the most prosperous segment of agriculture today, while wheat and cotton farmers, who have been propped up most, are in the worst trouble."

Also, according to the article, an overwhelming majority of agricultural economists believe the direct-payment program would produce a long list of additional unfortunate results. These include: stimulation of still more unwanted production; the spread of farm aid to all commodities; patterns of farming would be frozen; controls would be the most rigid in history; a new army of agricultural officials would be needed; inefficient farms would be kept in business at the expense of the efficient; and, eventually, food prices would rise.

What, then, should be done? The first step, in Mr. Strohm's view, is for Congress to "revise unwise price policies of the past and shut the government granary door to prevent further build-up." Then our food disposal programs would gradually reduce the incredibly large surpluses the government is holding.

Then something must be done about "the two million families whose farms do not bring them a decent living . . ." and who "represent a problem that is more sociological than agricultural." Their lack of capital and know-how makes it impossible for them to keep up. Mr. Strohm suggests that government should help these people find better opportunities, either in or out of farming.

The big thing, in sum, is that we need less farm legislation — not more. Here is the article's conclusion: "Farmers cannot expect—and, I'm sure, do not want—a sure thing. All they want is equality of opportunity, and freedom from too much government help. The fact is, as Dr. Fred H. Wiegmann of Louisiana State University, points out: 'Our main farm surplus today may be a surplus of legislation'."

The film "One in Twenty Thousand" was produced in New Orleans at the famed Ochsner Clinic with Dr. Alton Ochsner, one of the nation's noted lung cancer authorities, appearing. It is being distributed by the American Temperance Society, Washington, D. C.

Emphasized in the film is Dr. Ochsner's prediction that by 1970 about 18 per cent of all people having cancer will have cancer of the lung, almost one in five. This is contrasted with only 1 per cent in 1920, and 8 per cent in 1948.

Preliminary announcements call the semidocumentary production an honest film." All medical personnel are medical workers in real life and play themselves in the film. Scenes showing the pre-operative work of a surgical operation were not staged but were taken during actual surgery.

Beginning with the story of a heavy-smoking, small-town newspaper editor who gets a disturbing report on his personal visit to the mobile chest X-ray unit in his town, the film carries the editor through all the steps of consultation to the dramatic operation that saves his life.

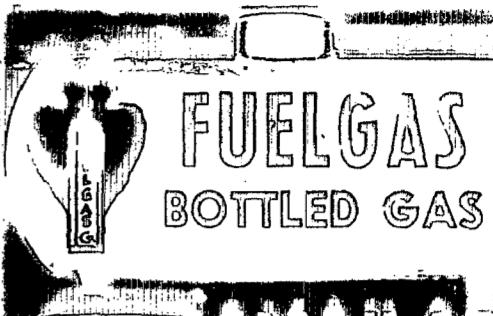

During the course of his interview with Dr. Ochsner, the editor learns the scientific evidence pointing to a link between smoking and lung cancer, and how he can avoid becoming one of the 20,000 who die of this disease every year in the United States.

An Insatiable Monster . . .

"An ever-increasing chunk of your tax dollar goes to satiate that Frankenstein monster known as 'the farm problem.' It devours 5.4 billion dollars in this year's gulf. And the money solves nothing!"

Thus writes John Strohm, one of the country's leading agricultural writers and editors in the May issue of The Reader's Digest. And the title of his article indicates its premise: "Let's Stop Trying to Legislate Farm Income!"

Just about everyone agrees that the various federal farm programs so far tried have been failures. So new programs are being concocted for Congressional consideration. One of these, which seems to have considerable support, follows the principles of the Brainerd Plan which was suggested some years ago. Under it, farm products would be sold in the free market for whatever prices they would bring, and the government would pay farmers the difference between that price and what the law established as a fair price.

This scheme, as Mr. Strohm sees it, has "a lot of political sex appeal." Theoretically, it would achieve a series of important goals all at once — that is food would be consumed instead of stored; food prices to consumers probably would decline, and the farmer would get his fair price.

So much for the credit side. The debits, as listed, are of a staggering character. If farm prices were supported at 90% of parity, the direct-payment plan would cost $10.7 billion a year within five years. This would happen at a time when farm income is at its historical high and our farm efficiency and output "are the envy of the Communist world." Moreover, Mr. Strohm makes this big point: ". . . farmers have accomplished this in spite of, not because of, government aid. To illustrate: livestock men, who have successfully fought off government price supports, are the most prosperous segment of agriculture today, while wheat and cotton farmers, who have been propped up most, are in the worst trouble."

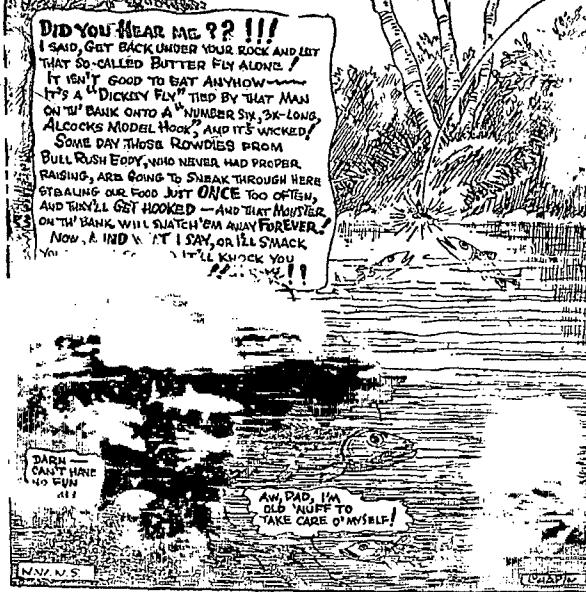

Also, according to the article, an overwhelming majority of agricultural economists believe the direct-payment program would produce a long list of additional unfortunate results. These include: stimulation of still more unwanted production; the spread of farm aid to all commodities; patterns of farming would be frozen; controls would be the most rigid in history; a new army of agricultural officials would be needed; inefficient farms would be kept in business at the expense of the efficient; and, eventually, food prices would rise.

What, then, should be done? The first step, in Mr. Strohm's view, is for Congress to "revise unwise price policies of the past and shut the government granary door to prevent further build-up." Then our food disposal programs would gradually reduce the incredibly large surpluses the government is holding.

Then something must be done about "the two million families whose farms do not bring them a decent living . . . and who 'represent a problem that is more sociological than agricultural'." Their lack of capital and know-how makes it impossible for them to keep up. Mr. Strohm suggests that government should help these people find better opportunities, either in or out of farming.

The big thing, in sum, is that we need less farm legislation — not more. Here is the article's conclusion: "Farmers cannot expect — and, I'm sure, do not want — a sure thing. All they want is equality of opportunity, and freedom from too much government help. The fact is, as Dr. Fred H. Wiegmann of Louisiana State University, points out: 'Our main farm surplus today may be a surplus of legislation'."

INTERESTING ITEMS OF NEWS GATHERED FROM THE FILES OF THE AVALANCHE OF 23 YEARS AGO

May 14, 1936

The City Council was confronted at its meeting Monday evening with the task of accepting the resignation of C. A. Miller as city manager. The official record of the meeting indicates that this was done "with regrets." Mr. Miller has accepted a similar position at Kingsley, a city of about 6,000, adjoining Iron Mountain, a city of about 12,000. He will leave Grayling just as soon as he can close up some pending important matters and his successor be obtained. Ever since Mr. Miller came here to assume his duties there have been a number to criticize him. If it wasn't one thing it was another. This, however, did not disturb him. He went right along just as though this opposition did not exist, doing his duty as he saw it, and we believe he has done an outstandingly good job for Grayling. Today Grayling has a fund of over $10,000 in the bank and all except current accounts are paid in full at about the finish of the fiscal year. That condition hasn't existed here in many years. No change has been made in the tax rate, according to Mr. Miller, in spite of rumors to the contrary. Every year changes occur in establishment of valuations of certain properties. These changes are usually made by the board of review.

The big wheels are ready to roll again. Prison crews at Camp Lehman at Hartwick Pines under the direction of Nels Wyman (pictured above) recently completed a new set of big wheels used in the past for moving logs out of the woods during the summer. The pair which had been on display at the Pines succumbed to old age. The metal parts were salvaged and reused with all new wooden portions. Yes, it took a few days to complete.

State Prisons Face Increase In Population

(Editor's Note: This is the second in a series of articles based on a survey of the Michigan prison system by the National Probation and Parole Association. It shows that Michigan's rising prison population will force the taxpayers to spend $9 to $14 million more a year within 10 years unless changes are made.)

LANSING—Why does Michigan face a 20 per cent increase in its prison population in the next 10 years unless something is done about it?

The Michigan Crime and Delinquency Council, a citizen group, said an 18-month survey of the state's corrections system by the National Probation and Parole Association gives some answers and promises some solutions.

The state's prisons now hold about 10,138 men and women. By 1970, this inmate population could rise to 12,980 if past and present trends continue.

The Council said the survey showed that Michigan sends more men to prison than comparable industrial states.

In 1956 and 1957, Michigan imprisoned 21 per cent more inmates than the national average, 77 per cent more than Iowa's progressive system. The survey showed that Michigan's prison population is "very high" for its overall population—134 inmates per 100,000 of general population. This is higher than all but six states, most of which are in the Deep South. Michigan sends 48 per cent more men to prison than the average for the North Central group of states also.

Michigan holds its prisoners for an average of 2.83 years, which is about the same as the national average, the survey showed, but which is also longer than such comparable states as Wisconsin, New Jersey and a number of North Central states.

The survey said the length of prison terms in Michigan is not the fault of state parole board delay or timidity—but rather the result of excessively long sentences required by law.

Michigan has more men serving life sentences (300) than any other state except Virginia and lists 21 offences for which a life sentence can be imposed—compared to only one in Wisconsin. Michigan stands 2nd, send only 23 per cent of its inmates to prison for maximum terms of 4 years or less compared to a national average of 46 per cent, a Central states average of 37 per cent, and a Wisconsin average of 84 per cent.

The Council said it used Wisconsin as a comparison frequently because it was a close neighbor and because it had demonstrated that more liberal policies do not endanger the public.

Michigan, the survey concluded, "is badly in need of statutory changes" to permit the courts to send men to prison for shorter periods and the parole board to release them earlier.

"Long term have a negative effect," the NPPA said. "For not more than two years or so, normally constructive work can be done with the prisoners. Thereafter, he receives little more than custody and mere custody without treatment is a predominantly destructive experience."

Gradual Increase In Personal Income Shows Economic Recovery From 1958

RECOVERY FROM ECO-NOMIC ills of the past year is being demonstrated by gradual increases in personal income. And Michigan looks good.

Individual income increased 7.6 per cent during February, the last figures available, compared to the national average increase of seven per cent.

Thousands are still unemployed, though the number is being reduced every month.

All states showed a spurt to ward recovery except Arkansas.

Michigan's total personal income for the month was $1,476,600,000.

Nevada had the largest increase in the nation, 14.96 per cent. This was attributed to the rise in non-manufacturing business, mainly desert resorts and tourism.

Increases in industrial states including Michigan, were related to higher wages, rather than more jobs.

The reports from national sources still list large numbers of organized labor about automation. Labor leaders charge that thousands of workers laid off in the past year will have no jobs to return to because their places have been taken by machines. Members of the legislature point to the increased unit-production figures of automobile companies in Detroit and the fewer number of employees.

Alaska, the 49th state, was one of the losers in the report, showing a 4.8 per cent reduction in personal income for the survey period.

FEDERAL SURPLUS FOODS are coming into Michigan in greater volume than any other state.

Current figures show that 538,385 persons are receiving the free food, which is made available to direct relief clients to supplement the diet.

Other portions of the shipments go to public institutions and school hot lunch programs. Michigan took more than 10 per cent of the total of Federal surpluses in 1958.

MORE THAN 1,000 school lunch cooks and managers convened in Lansing last week for a look at some of the latest equipment and a session complete with seminars in the field.

It was all designed to better equip schools and their employees to provide better hot lunches for Michigan's school children.

NATIONAL REPORTS indicate that Michigan's financial plight has damaged Gov. Williams' chances of moving onto the country's political stage in 1960.

They report that, while Republicans are suffering from the situation in Michigan, the guns are being trained on Williams nationally as the governor of a state that faced bankruptcy.

For that and other reasons Williams has stepped up his speak-
